Turtle Hatchery

Sea turtles are fascinating creatures. They are naturally born under the sandy beach. The weather conditions play a major part in deciding their gender. When born little creatures approach the sea shore and swim continuously for 48 hours to reach and rest in their new habitat yonder. This natural way of evading the predators area is usually lost when the young ones after maturing in hatcheries are released to the sea. Gender balancing is also a problem arising here due to exposure to different temperatures. There are about 10 such hatcheries right along the beaches of Sri Lanka where protection to injured turtles are also provided. Habaraduwa is one of them-3km away from RV. If you visit at night releasing baby turtles to the sea could be witnessed.
